It is difficult to decide who should be decorated for yesterday's game—the whole Detroit outfit with laurels or the Nationals with a bushel of lemons—but suffice to say that it would be easier for a large-sized cannon to wiggle through the eye of a small-sized needle than it was for the Tigers to win in ten innings by 5 to 4.

Jennings' men have more than a hundred engagements before the end of the race for the flag, but it is doubtful if they will ever again experience as much difficulty in eking out a victory as they did at National Park yesterday. The visitors showed considerably more class than on Saturday, but at that the Nationals should have come out ahead, for our nine put up a game fight after losing the lead in the second inning, and finally tied the score in the ninth, only to lose out in the tenth, a pair of doubles doing the trick after one man had been retired.

It was a hard one to lose, especially as there were more than 5,000 fans on hand, but it is doubtful if any one who made the journey to bid farewell to the Tigers would deny that he had a run for his money and was given a thrilling exhibition of the grand and glorious national pastime.

Change of Pitchers.

There were lots of funny features about the game. Cantillon figured that a south-paw ought to prove troublesome to the Tigers, so he called upon Oscar Graham to do the flinging stunt; Graham survived the first inning, but only one third of the second round had passed when the Californian commenced to weaken. In the first, however, the Nationals had taken unwonted liberties with the delivery of Sievers, so when it came to the pitcher's turn to bat in the second, Jennings selected George Mullin to hit for Sievers. This was a tip for Cantillon, and Tom Hughes was sent in to pitch while Chase Patten chased behind the stand to warm up. One of Hughes' curves was so good that Mullin wanted to see it to it over Jones' head for a double, scoring two, and a hurry call was sent to Patten. The sidewheeler was not in working order, and with a man on third he made a wild pitch which allowed the runner to advance. This put Detroit in the lead by one run and Killian, who succeeded Sievers, and Patten allowed no more scores until the ninth. In the opening half the Tigers got one on a double, a sacrifice, and a hit, and it looked as though there was nothing to the game so far as Washington was concerned. In the closing half, however, things happened. With two on base, Ganley batted and Jones singled. Left. Two runs were needed to tie it up, and Deleahanty proved the man for the emergency, for he tore off a double to the left field fence which counted two runners.

The fun which had started home before Ganley hit returned to their seats, but their joy was short-lived, for, with one down in the tenth, doubles by Downs and Cobb took the game out of the Nationals' grip and placed it on the left side of Detroit's percentage column.

Nationals Lose Chance.

In the eighth the Nationals had a royal chance to win, for, before any one was out, the bases were loaded, but there was nothing doing, as Nill fanned and Perrine hit to the pitcher, who threw the runner out at the plate, and Perrine was doubled at first.

In the opener Ganley went to first by the big four route, Jones singled, and both advanced on Deleahanty's sacrifice, and then came Anderson with a mighty swipe to center field, which sent a runner to the plate and scored both runners. Detroit made three in the second on two passes, a single, a double, and a wild pitch.

In the eighth the lack of a timely hit or long fly proved costly to the Cantillonites, but in the ninth the visitors increased their lead. Schaefer doubled, was sacrificed to third, and beat the throw home after a fly. With two gone in the second half game he was asked to bat, and Jones singled, then came Deleahanty's clutch, which scored both men. In the tenth successive doubles by Downs and Cobb decided the issue.
